Redefining “Success”: How skilled professions can set students up for college and career success

1. What are some great career opportunities available for students without a college degree?
2. Is college still WORTH IT for people who want to go into skilled trades?
3. What if 4-year college isn't the best fit? How can they get the training they need to be successful in the field?
4. How can they get started in the field, and see if this is something that might be a good fit for them?
5. How can students find colleges that will set them up for success if they want to pursue a trade career?
